

Team Burma wants you to give dictatorship in Burma a good kick.

After the military regime in Burma blocked aid to 2.4 million people affected by a major cyclone and cracked down on non-violent protests led by Buddhist monks last year, it's clear that the world needs to come together to tackle the disaster that is the military regime in Burma. But who says doing good and taking on dictatorship can't be fun? Not Team Burma.

From August 8-24, while the Olympics take place in Beijing, China, Team Burma is organizing chinlone games to rally people around the world to give dictatorship a good kick. It's like taking the Olympic ideals of peace, brotherhood, and human rights and kicking it up a notch. (China, by the way, is the biggest supporter of the military regime in Burma. Coincidence? Clearly not.)

Chinlone is the national sport of Burma and embodies democracy, friendship, and partnership. There are no points and no teams – the game is about keeping the ball off the ground without using your hands, and doing it with athleticism, grace, and skill. In the end, everybody wins. Except maybe for Burma's Senior General Than Shwe. After all, it's his face on the ball.

Find out what you can do for Burma. Visit www.teamburma.org

8-8-08 for Burma calls on China to use its unique leverage to help save lives and build freedom in Burma, and thereby honor the spirit and principles of the Olympics. For more information, please visit www.8808frburma.org

Team Burma wants you to give dictatorship in Burma a good kick.

After the military regime in Burma blocked aid to 2.4 million people affected by a major cyclone and cracked down on non-violent protests led by Buddhist monks last year, it's clear that the world needs to come together to tackle the disaster that is the military regime in Burma. But who says doing good and taking on dictatorship can't be fun? Not Team Burma.

From August 8-24, while the Olympics take place in Beijing, China, Team Burma is organizing chinlone games to rally people around the world to give dictatorship a good kick. It's like taking the Olympic ideals of peace, brotherhood, and human rights and kicking it up a notch. (China, by the way, is the biggest supporter of the military regime in Burma. Coincidence? Clearly not.)

Chinlone is the national sport of Burma and embodies democracy, friendship, and partnership. There are no points and no teams – the game is about keeping the ball off the ground without using your hands, and doing it with athleticism, grace, and skill. In the end, everybody wins. Except maybe for Burma's Senior General Than Shwe. After all, it's his face on the ball.

Find out what you can do for Burma. Visit www.teamburma.org

8-8-08 for Burma calls on China to use its unique leverage to help save lives and build freedom in Burma, and thereby honor the spirit and principles of the Olympics. For more information, please visit www.8808frburma.org